

Kieling, John, NMENV

From: Elizabeth Nunn [elizabeth21641@gmail.com]

Sent: Wednesday, May 05, 2010 11:06 AM

To: Kieling, John, NMENV

Subject: Wake up, people

It's really not a matter of "saving the Earth" as the planet will be here long after humanity has gone. It's a matter of waking up and respecting each other and each other's right to clean air, clean and abundant water, and the right to planetary citizenship.

The loss of respect for other human beings, as well as the loss of integrity in some, is what will end the human race. Cultures world-wide know this is our last chance. And that chance is now. Right now. Unless we wake up to our responsibility to each other, our children, and succeeding generations, there will be no more humanity.

Is that a risk we are willing to take?

In the movie, "Oh, God", a grocery store manager realizes how much has to be done and goes into a panic stating, "How are we going to do all this?" God answers, "That's why I gave you each other".

That's what we've got...each other. And the understanding that the answer to the problem is never found at the level of the problem. Guidance and direction from a higher level will get us through this crisis-based "status quo" (which is Latin for "the mess we're in"). It's really quite simple.

Elizabeth Nunn, M.Ed.
Santa Fe

33515

5/5/2010